EDITOR'S NOTES

We are indebted to our Vice-President and program chairperson, Mrs. Guy McMaster, for arranging the following programs for our Society in the coming months:

- January - "Footprints Across the Volunteer State", Mrs. William Lawrence
- February - "Journal 1857-1862", Mrs. J. D. Stanfill
- March - "Experiences in Researching", Louis Jones
- April - "Writing and Publishing a Family History", Tom Hillsman
- May - "Joy of Researching", Mrs. H. L. Davidson
- June - "A Law Students 1840 Diary", Mrs. Evans Wilson, Sr.
- July - "Funeral Home Records as an Aid to the Genealogist" Finley Surber

Our Society meets on the second Tuesday of each month at 7 PM at the Jackson Madison County Library. You are urged to attend regularly.

A NEW COLUMN, Publication Exchange Review, begins with this issue. This is being edited by Miss Judy Alpha. We hope that it will alert you to material that is available both at our Library and by subscription.

OUR THANKS TO THE JACKSON MADISON COUNTY LIBRARY and particularly to Miss Emma Inman Williams for providing us the opportunity to publish excerpts from the newspaper clippings of columns written by Capt. T. M. Gates about 1912. Capt. Gates was born, according to one item in 1839. The scrapbook containing the clippings was owned by the late Charles McMillin, a nephew of Capt. Gates.

We also appreciate the opportunity to provide our members with information on Registered Voters in the Third Ward, Jackson, Madison County, Tennessee, 1915-17. The ledger from which this information is copied is also the property of the Library. It was a gift from a Society member, Helen Weaver Williams of Mission, Texas. Mrs. Williams states, My Aunt, Mrs. Bertha Scott, 286 Russell Road, Jackson, Tennessee found the following book in an old apartment house that she bought several years ago on Highland Avenue in Jackson. It was the old Jon Hall home at 376 Highland where found."

NEEDED: New Editor and/or Assistant Editor for Family Findings. Should enjoy organizing material and be a fairly good typist. Call Carmen Bruer, 901-427-0743 or 427-7963 if interested in volunteer work that provides worthwhile information for fellow Society members. Requires 16 to 24 working hours quarterly.

PUBLICATION EXCHANGE REVIEW

This column will review publications of Genealogical or Historical Societies. All publications sent in will become the property of the Mid-West Tennessee Genealogical Society's library which is housed in the Tennessee Room at the Jackson Madison County Library. I will review the publications or will accept your review which should contain the name of publication, the society that publishes it, the editor's name and address, cost of dues, number of pages, counties covered, state it is from and other useful information.

Send this to Judy Alpha, Exchange Publications Editor,
120 W. Mason St., Jackson, TN. 38301.

HISTORICAL HAPPENINGS IN JACKSON, by Capt. T. M. Gates
(Published in the Daily Sun about 1912).

The first Confederate soldier to die in Jackson was Capt. Ray who commanded a company of Kentucky cavalry. He was the father of Mrs. Granville McCabe, deceased and of Mrs. Josephine Lockheart of Arkansas. He died in 1862 in a two-story frame house that stood where the McGee-Ross hardware store now stands.

The oldest house in Madison county, the residence of Mr. John J. Boon, two and a half miles southwest of Jackson. It was built in 1824 and is well preserved today.

The oldest frame houses in Jackson stand close together, at the corner of Main and Cumberland streets, one known as the Anderson house, and the other as the Woman's Exchange," owned by Mr. W. P. Harris and his sisters. The writer when five years old, remembers living in the Anderson place in 1844.

There is not a vestige left, either of stone, or brick, or wood of any house that was built in Jackson in 1825.

The oldest brick houses now standing in Jackson are the Fenner house, the old part of the Central Hotel, and the brick residence situated in South Jackson now owned by Miss Annie Stephens and her sister, Mrs. Clark. These houses were built in the early 30's.

Mr. James Caruthers (father of Mr. Stoddert Caruthers, deceased) built what is now known as the Bray residence on Baltimore street, about the year 1835.

HISTORICAL HAPPENINGS IN JACKSON - Capt. T. M. Gates

The first road opened in Madison county leading from the village of Jackson, was what is now called the Poplar Corner road that runs parallel with Hollywood Cemetery. This road was opened in 1822.

The bell that rests in the framework in the alley north of the police station once hung in a cupelo that sat upon the roof of the old part of the present court house. This old bell carries me back to the days of my boyhood when the town marshall, Mr. I. W. Norwood, deceased (grandfather of Mr. Arch Norwood, well known by many of the citizens of Jackson), would ring out upon the air nine strokes at night at nine o'clock, which was a signal for all slaves to leave the street, and if caught without a pass, they would be whipped.

CAPTURE - PRISON -ESCAPE - FLIGHT

by Giles Richerson McDaniel, December 20, 1913

Fifty-two years ago about six hundred Confederate soldiers met at Grand Pass, Saline County, Missouri, in a disorganized state except as to companies. Recognizing the necessity of regimental organization, a meeting for that purpose was held which resulted in the election of Captain Frank Robertson, of Saline County, as Colonel of the regiment, temporarily to conduct us South to General Sterling Price. The day following we began our march South. While in camp on Blackwater, in Johnson County, Missouri, as the day was growing shorter our pickets came into camp rather unceremoniously and hurriedly, omitting entirely the usual courtesy of giving our camp guard the countersign. Well, they were excusable, for right on their heels and sending bullets in rather a reckless fashion that whistled over our heads in camp, was a company of Federal Cavalry from General Jeff C. Davis' command. Guess they came a little nearer than they intended, for they hurried back about as fast as they came, after one or two of our companies gave them a salute. But not all of them returned, as a number of saddles were emptied by our bullets. However, six hundred had no show before six thousand, so we felt compelled to surrender, stacking our arms as gracefully as we could, but not without weeping.

We were marched to Sedalia, the terminus of the Missouri Pacific Railroad at that time; from there to St. Louis, in box cars (the kind we ship hogs in now), without fire. December was on her second lap then. Do you think we were cold? Our entrance into Graciot Street Prison or McDowell College was on our Saviour's birthday. Don't want to celebrate that way again. Having been searched, we were put in four large rooms by companies. There we were, without a plan, not knowing what would be next. Were we fed? Yes, on stale baker's bread and pickled pork. The days were passing slowly-- too slowly to keep ahead of disease. Measles and other troubles played havoc among the boys. They were carried out in coffins at the rate of from six to ten a day. We whiled away the time as best we could. It was then I learned to chew tobacco. (So far the pronoun "I" has been used once, but as the writer is of necessity to be a principal actor in the story that is to follow, I don't see how its use can be avoided.)

Not many days passed before I began to grow a little restless. Then I began to devise a plan of escape, without subscribing to the oath of allegiance to the United States Government. Having determined the matter in my own mind, I submitted my plan to my bed-fellow for his advice. He at once said it could not be done. It is true, I was only a boy, barely nineteen years old, but the thought would not down. The more I thought, the more determined I became to make the effort.

It will be necessary here to tell a little about the construction of the building in which we were quartered. In fact, the prison was two buildings connected by a brick partition wall, on one side was Dr. McDowell's dwelling house and on the other was his medical college building, with no opening from one to the other except by a narrow hall at the rear. At the end of the hall next to the dwelling was the kitchen where our food was prepared; at the other end was our dining room, I don't think there was any escape from this hall. The outside was of solid stone. It was the custom of the federal officials to detail a few of our men as waiters each day. There were three sentinels continuously in this hall; one at either end, and the other in the middle. At meal time the only the waiters were permitted to pass from the dining room to kitchen and return. After due consideration, I concluded my plan of escape could not be executed successfully from our quarters in the college building. Hoping it might be more favorable if, by any chance, I could run the blockade through the narrow hall and get into the dwelling house where our officers were, I determined to make the effort.

As I was leaving the dining room one day, I noticed by the door a small kettle and tin plate. So, acting in the role of waiter, I picked up the kettle in one hand and plate in the other, and walked boldly through the hall towards the kitchen. Each sentinel, as I approached, raised his gun and let me pass. On reaching the kitchen door, instead of entering, I turned to the left in another hall leading to a back stairway. Up I went to the hall above. Here I found a wide hall from which entrance was made into any of the various rooms occupied by our officers. The one I entered chanced to be the one occupied by my own company officers and others I knew. You may think they were not surprised to see me. After the greeting, they wanted to know how I got there and for what purpose. I answered, "Just for a visit." Though I had passed three sentinels, I was as much a prisoner as before I started. Now, you ask what I had gained. I answer, several things, First, confidence; second, a place where I could complete my plan for escape. Within a day or so, I confided my plan, first to Colonel Robertson. He could not have said more to discourage me. Next, I talked with Col. Alexander. If possible he was more discouraging than Colonel Robertson, saying I would either be killed or caught in the attempt and put in a cell where I would die. Captain Ruxton advised me, by all means, to abandon the idea. My brother, John, was one of our officers; but I did not consult him, for fear he would oppose me. Not one of the whole number gave me the least encouragement. My determination did not weaken; but sustained by the little success already won, my nerve became steadier. About this time I saw Colonel McGoffin promenading on the porch, slowly, with his hands locked behind him, apparently in deep thought-so much so, I hesitated to disturb him. I sat on the window sill 'til he passed me several times.

At last, I said, "Colonel." He turned, sat down by me and asked me what I would have. I made known to him my purpose and unfolded my plan. In reply, he patted my shoulder with his hand and said, "Go it, my son; you can make it!" Seldom in my whole life have I been so impressed with words from a man. If there had been any faltering in my determination, it vanished and did not return.

There were several negroes with us when we were captured; they were in the prison with us, and sometimes the federal guards would allow them to go to the stores to make purchases. One of them carried a keg of ashes out of the building every day. When these facts were made known to me before leaving my own quarters, I said to myself, "I can be a negro too, and get out of here." And so I did!

A little more now about the building. There was a wide stairway leading down from the second floor of the house (our officers were all on that floor) to the first, landing near the front door through which you pass to the street. At the top of this stairway was a guard, with his bayonet fixed, his gun resting horizontally across the stairway. Halfway down was another, and at the foot was the third, all with guns in same position.

The federal officer of the day always visited the several rooms at 8:00 P. M. to see that everything was right for the night.

About 7:30 P. M., January 25, 1862, with a charred cork I blacked my hands and wrist. Then my brother John took the cork to try his skill on my face and neck. Having gotten one side of my face the proper color, Captain Ruxton (who was standing picket for me in the hall just outside the door) gave the signal agreed upon of the approach of the officer of the day on his round of inspection. Thereupon I tumbled back tumbled back upon the floor in one corner of the room, and Captain Sims picked up a pile of blankets, threw them on me and sat down on the blankets. He weighed about a hundred and eighty pounds. The officer, followed by Captain Ruxton, entered. After a short conversation with our officers, he departed for the night --greatly to my relief. Then I was relieved of the weight of the blankets, plus a hundred and eighty pound man.

Then the blacking proceeded 'til the half dozen lookers-on said "Well done." Without loss of time, I picked up a keg of ashes, put it on my shoulder, walked through the door and across the hall to the top of the stairway, where stood the first sentinel. He raised his gun, I passed down to the second sentinel, who as courteously raised his gun, permitting me to pass on to the third and last sentinel within the building. Without a question he raised his gun. I stepped out on the sidewalk. Though I had passed six sentinels and was on the street, I was not free. In the rear of the building on both sides of the street was a chain of sentinels completely surrounding all the building on the two halfblocks. I was in the center. Turning to the left, walked a short distance, stopped and put the keg of ashes down; then on across the street to a narrow passageway between two buildings. Having gone through to the rear of the buildings I heard the tramping of soldiers. Here I was aided by the darkness. I soon discovered an officer with a squad of soldiers making the round, relieving the sentinels already on post. I stepped into a small shed-room near by, for concealment, and waited 'til the work of relieving the sentinel nearest me was done and squad gone.

I had been a soldier long enough to know that to pass an outside guard without countersign, strategy would have to be used. For this I was prepared, having provided myself with a canteen filled with water with which to wash my face and hands after I had passed the last sentinel. So, when all was quiet, I left my hiding place and walked within a few feet of the newly established sentinel. I did not wait for him to halt me, but stooped and said to him, "This is a very cold night." He, more freely than I expected, engaged in conversation with me. As we talked, I edged up nearer to the fire he was standing by and said to him, "This would be a fine night for a drink or two of whiskey." He very readily agreed with me. The way then seemed clearer to me. I said to him, "I don't believe you know me. My name is Dick. I belong to Col. Robertson. He has sent me out to get this canteen full of whiskey for him. If you will let me pass, when I return, I will give you a drink." After a moment's thought, he said, "That is pretty ticklish business, If the officers should find out I had let you pass, they would punish me severely." I replied, "There is no danger. I would be the last man in the world to tell it, and besides, a good drink of whiskey would help you stand this cold." I saw he was weakening, To avoid any possible risk, he explained to me that he had just been put on post and would be there two hours, and if I failed to get back in that time, I must stay away four hours longer, when he would be on duty again, thereby doing away with the risk of exposing him. I consented to his plan, and bade him goodbye until my return. I walked off, having passed the last sentinel--was out--. I did not go far down the street 'til I met George, a negro servant of my father's who was with me when we were captured. It had been planned for him to go out ahead of me and wait at a certain place 'til I came, He was faithful! We walked on several blocks until we came to a dark alley. We turned in and went far enough to get away from the street. Here the water in the canteen, that was to have given place for the whiskey that was never put in it, was used to wash my hands and face. This done, we proceeded down the street and pulled up at the Virginia Hotel; went in and I registered,..... George Richerson and servant, Jacksonville, Illinois.

Thinking possibly I had not washed clean in the dark alley, I went into the wash-room to examine, and do it again if necessary. This was the first thing that frightened me. I was not half washed! I did the job again, and have not been a negro since. When I returned to the office a federal officer, who was not in the office when I went to the wash-room, and the hotel clerk were engaged in, seemingly, an earnest, confidential talk. I saw the clerk nod his head towards me, and their voices were immediately lowered so that I could not catch their words. I think I heard and saw enough to know my presence had created suspicion, if any existed, I stepped up to the counter in the presence of the federal officer and asked the clerk if he knew Mr. John G. Brown, with a certain firm. He said he did, and that he boarded at that hotel but roomed elsewhere. I requested that when he came to breakfast the next morning, that he be sent to my room at ten o'clock, claiming him as my friend, I don't know wheather he went to my room or not, as I left it at six A. M. This was done to assure this officer and clerk that I would not leave the hotel until after ten o'clock. If they wanted me then I would not be there. I was sent to my room. George going with me. There were two beds, George occupying one, and I the other. I began our conversation by telling George I felt sure we were considered suspicious characters, without any thought of frightening him, by relating the occurrences in the office. His breathing grew faster and faster. The first thing he said, with a quivering voice, was "Marse Giles, we must get out of here!" I tried to reassure him by telling him we could not stay on the street all night; that the police would pick us up; but instead, we would go to bed and get a little sleep and get out early in the morning. This I felt sure we could do, because we were not expected to leave until after ten o'clock the next day. So, we turned in and got snatches of sleep through the night. We were up and ready to go at six o'clock. To avoid suspicion, I thought it best for us not to go down together. I told him to stay in the room about five minutes after I was gone, so as to give me time to stop in the office long enough to pay my bill and get out on the street. I would wait for him outside. This done, I went out on the street and waited. The wait was so long I went back in the building to look for him, and found him on the same floor on which we had spent the night--walking around through the halls, unable to find his way out. I led him down two flights of steps to the top of the third. From this point we could see the outdoor of the house. I said, "Stand here until you see me pass through the door to the street, and then walk slowly down and find me outside." This accomplished, we walked down the street towards the river, intending to cross over into Illinois. It was very cold, the river frozen over except a channel for a ferry boat. On our arrival I noticed that each person wishing to board the ferry boat was required to show a permit or pass. Then it dawned on me that the city was under martial law. I had no pass. We then walked up the river a long ways, until we were clear away from all buildings. Coming to a corn field, I thought surely we were out of the city and free passing on through the corn field, but keeping near the river, we came to the edge of the field. To my surprise, we were within fifty yards of a sentinel post just ahead of us, and occupied by three soldiers. Here my presence of mind served me well. I said to George, intending for them to hear me, "There is no good place up here to get ice; we'll have to go back down the river." We walked back through the corn, without a word being spoken to us. Then I knew there was a chain of guards around the city. Having gone far enough to feel safe, we stopped to think and consult a little. We then went through the corn field in the opposite direction from the river, to see how things looked that way. Just outside the fence at the edge of the field was a blue grass common several hundred yards wide and extending to the timber in the Mississippi bottom. Passing over this was herd of dairy cows numbering from fifty to a hundred. I said "George, if we will get in among that herd of cows and walk along with them, keeping our heads low, so as not to be seen above their backs, they will lead us past the guards and into the timber." This we did, and it worked like a charm. Thanking the cows and bidding them good morning, we worked our way through the timber and brush, always keeping near the river and up stream.

OBITUARY OF "UNCLE" GREEN SMITH

This obituary appeared in a local paper following the death of Green Smith on 11 March 1915.

Perhaps the Oldest Man in the State Died Saturday

Saturday, March 11, "Uncle Green Smith died at his home five miles west of Trezevant, near Holly Leaf. He was perhaps the oldest, and in many respects the most remarkable man in Tennessee. Born in North Carolina about the year 1800, he came with his father to Carroll county, or to what is now Carroll county, the county not then being organized. He was only ten years of age and they settled upon the farm on which he was living at the time of his death.

He was always healthy, and up to a few years ago he often visited among his friends and relatives, walking to and from the places, and on one occasion since he has passed the century mark, he walked to the home of one of his sons, who lived some 14 miles from him.

His mental faculties were as good seemingly, when he died as they ever were. He had fine natural sense, but no education, and while he had little of this world's goods, he was strictly honest. He was kind and harmless, and never caused any one any trouble.

He was always faithful in his attendance at church at Pleasant Green, and helped dig the first grave that was ever dug at that burying ground, and has missed but few funerals there since. He told his friend, J. M. Williamson, some five months ago that he still wanted to live, but we are informed that he expressed himself as being perfectly satisfied with his future hope, and had no fears of death.

Funeral services were conducted at Pleasant Green, and one of the largest crowds that ever gathered there at a burial was present.

He had little of life's comforts, but he had gained more than falls to the common lot of humanity, for "Godliness with contentment is a great gain." Many of his virtues are worthy of our emulation, for "he lived in the house by the side of the road, and was a friend to men."

On 19 March 1964 "BELIEVE IT OR NOT" by Ripley pictured Green Smith in the yard near his log cabin with the following statement:
GREEN SMITH (1800-1915) of Holly Leaf, Tenn. lived in the same log cabin for 100 years.

HISTORICAL EVENTS IN JACKSON AND ELSEWHERE - by Capt. T. M. Gates

Sixty-five years ago on the lot where now stands the residence of Mr. Thos. Rosser, and the lot west, now owned by Mr. Rogers on East Main Street, was the property of Mr. Stephen Sybert. Mr. Sybert was an old man when the writer was a little boy. In those early days the art of photography was not known. Portrait painting was the only means of portraying the likeness. Mr. Sybert procured a picture of Adam and Eve driven out of the Garden of Eden, and traveled through the country exhibiting what was then a wonderful piece of art. After exhibiting these paintings, he made arrangements with the world's wonder, Tom Thumb, and for a season travelled with this freak of nature.

Mr. Sybert moved to Jackson from Bolivar, Tenn. in the early 30's. Mr. Sybert and his wife had no children. For some reason, I know not, (but the sequel will show the hand of Providence) he made a visit back to Bolivar and during his stay a little girl baby was born to a couple in Bolivar that cost the life of its mother. The village of Bolivar at that time numbered only a few hundred inhabitants and the whole town was much concerned, and in great sympathy for the young father, and the motherless child.

To add to the distress of this family the husband was sick and in a few weeks he died. As I've stated above Mr. and Mrs. Sybert were childless. He knew the father and mother of the little baby, and offered to take the little child and adopt it. After consulting the near relatives, it was agreed with him to adopt the child. He procured a soft feather pillow and the few-days-old girl baby was brought to Jackson in a buggy, sleeping upon the pillow.

In the course of time little Mary (that was the name given by her foster parents) grew up to womanhood, and her parents lavished upon her all the advantages of education to make her what she afterwards became to be, a highly cultured noble woman.

Soon after Miss Mary had grown to womanhood, a young man located in Jackson from the state of New York, who was a skillful machinist. In the course of time this young man and Mary met and there was a mutual admiration. Soon they became man and wife. From this union there were five children born: only two survive, Mrs. Mann, and her brother, Mr. Ed Curtiss, one of Jackson's honored citizens.

Mr. H. H. Curtiss, father of the two children mentioned above, was highly cultured and universally beloved by the citizens of Jackson. The writer was much attached to Mr. Curtiss, as he was a man of brilliant mind, and his conversation was as chaste as a woman's, and his heart responded to the call of distress.
